Parents and their children can now enjoy learning to tie a tie together. . .

At last, the enchanting age old story of the Rabbit and the Fox is available for teaching the art of tying a simple, yet elegant knot in a tie. For generations, this endearing old world mnemonic* was passed from father to son by word of mouth only.

Unfortunately, it has become all but lost to the minds of present-day well-dressed men and women. Now, this clever memory jogger has been revived for the benefit of all future members of the tie wearing society.

After reading about the rabbit's flight from the fox, you will never again be at a loss as to how to tie this basic "school boy" knot.

Mnemonic- The art of memorizing something by associating it with words, phrase or sentences which have been especially designed to help you REMEMBER.

Suggestion: Make this a fun activity for all participants. If you have a couple of ties that have been hanging in the closet for years, grab one for each person and follow along as you read the story.

Deep in the Woods of Tie Land, a Little Rabbit lived snug as a bug in a cool dark hole which had long been deserted by some sort of digging creature.

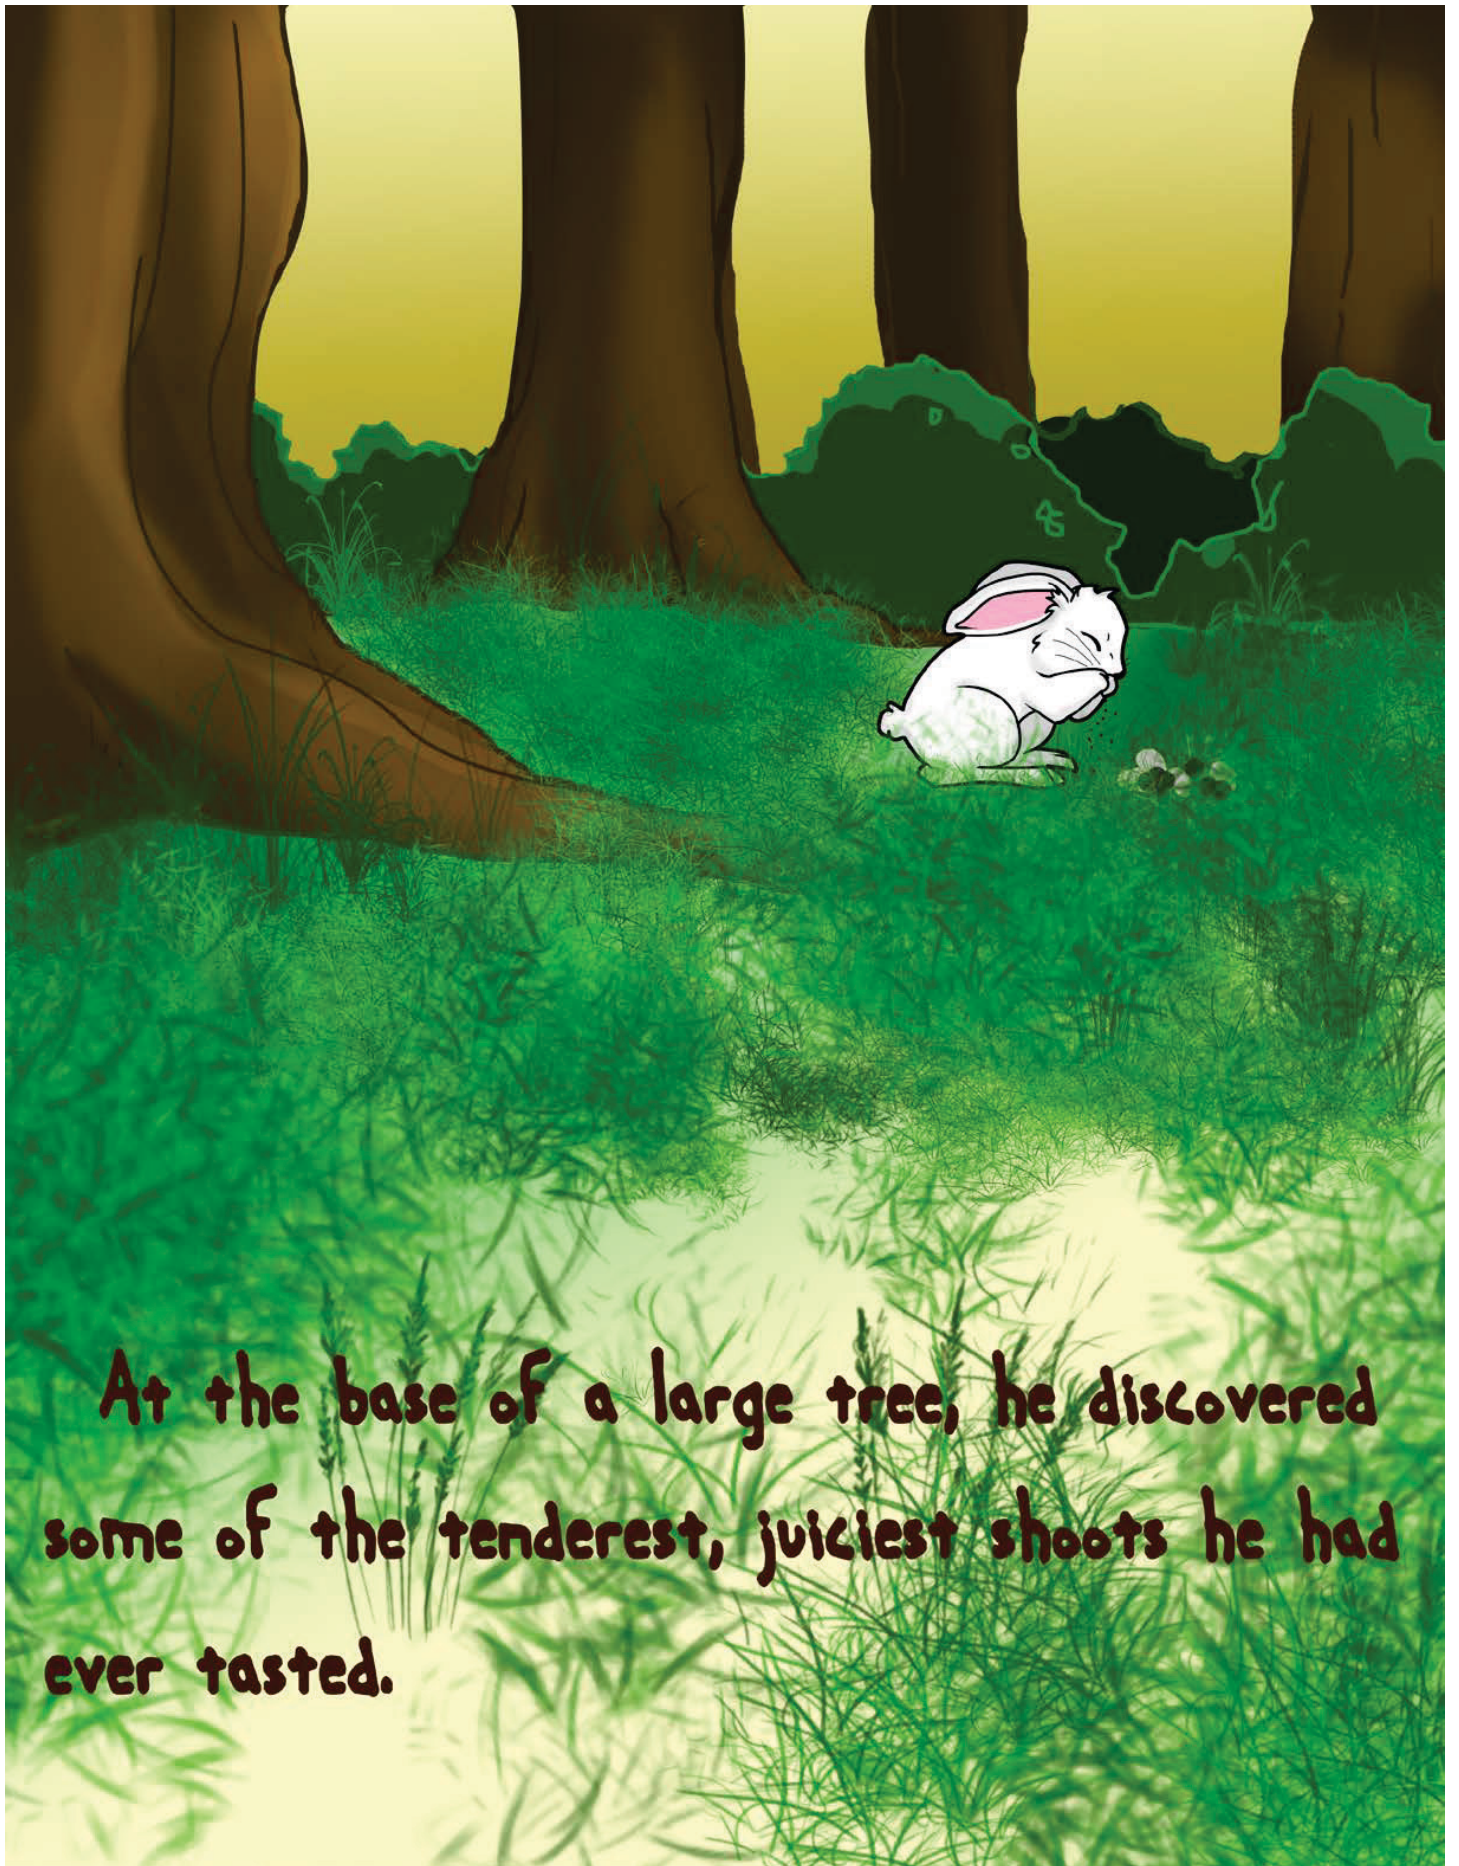

The Little Rabbit enjoyed sleeping in that nice, cozy place, far from the rays of the blazing sun.

In the late evening, he would come out and forage for some juicy shoots and tender morsels to eat.

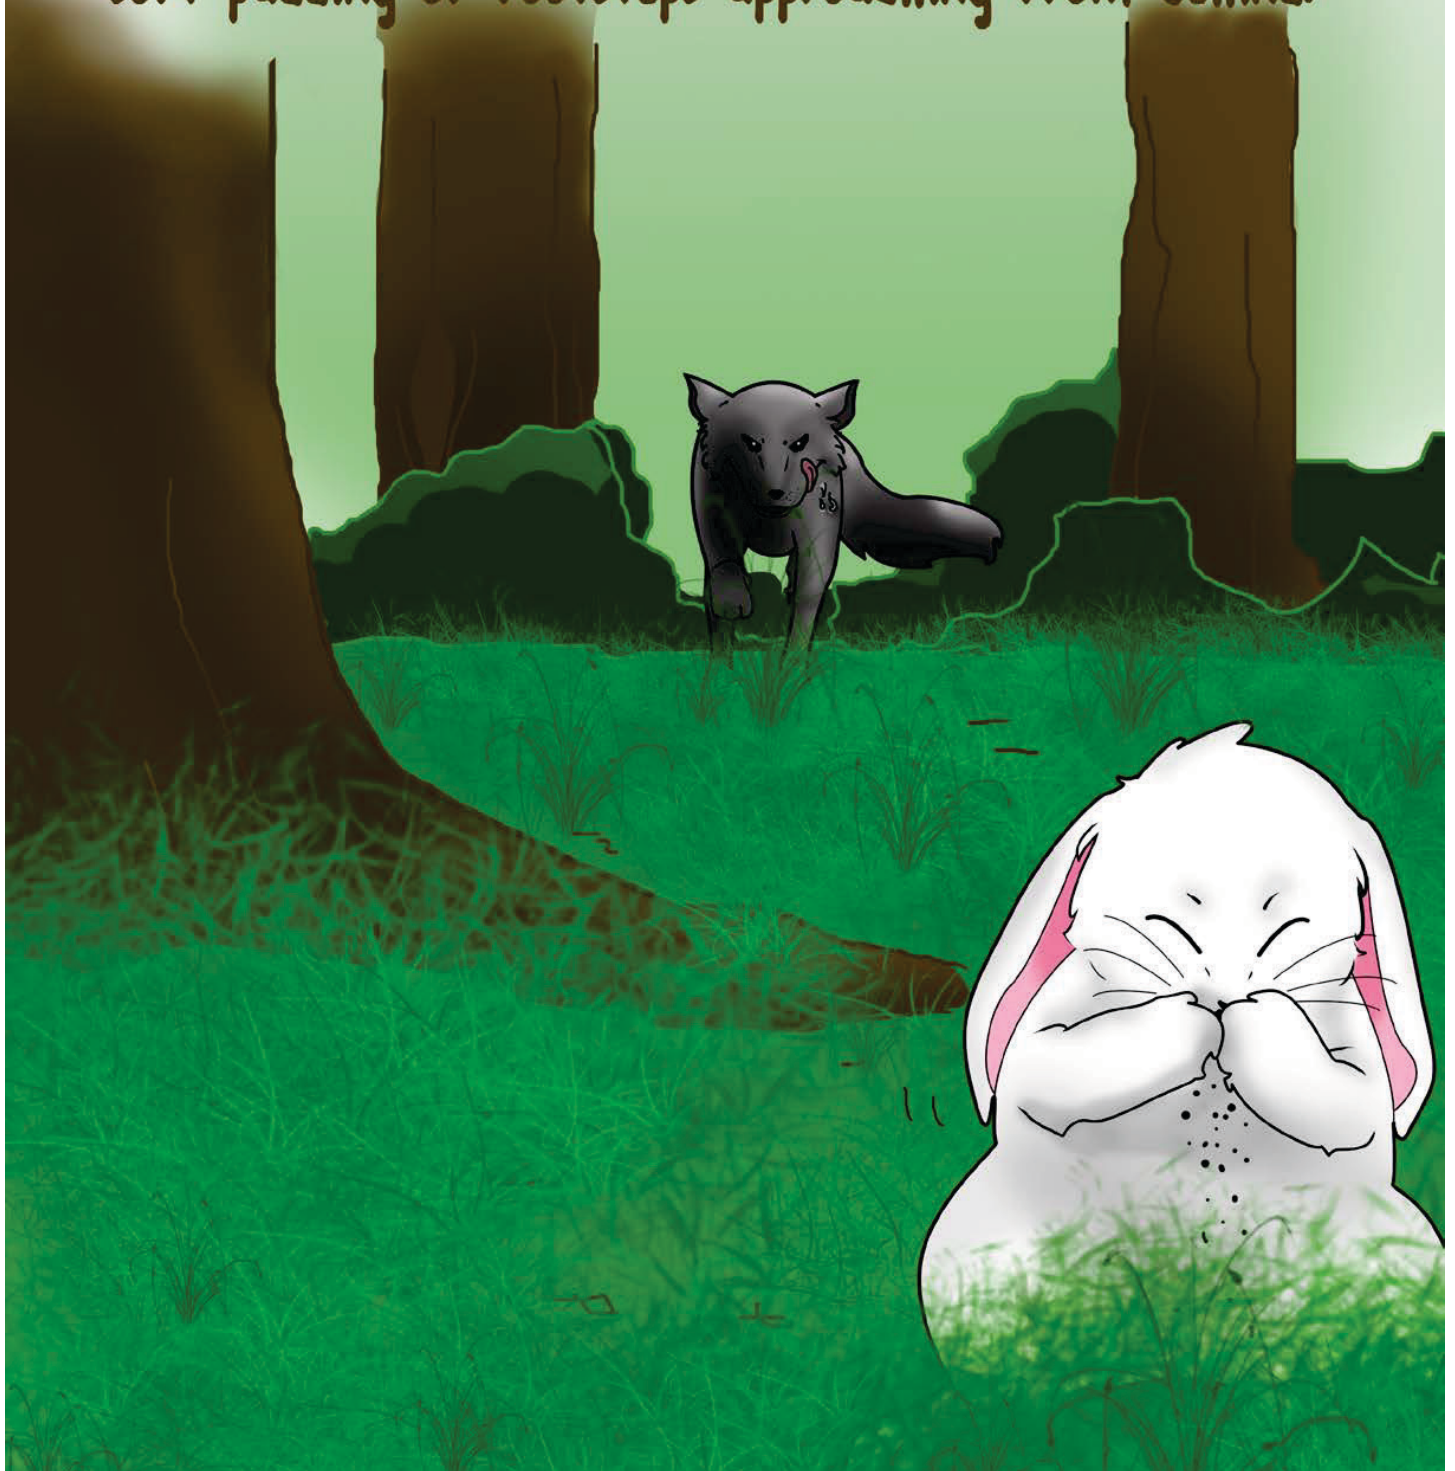

One afternoon, the Little Rabbit strayed farther away from the safety of his home than he normally did.

At the base of a large tree, he discovered some of the tenderest, juiciest shoots he had ever tasted.

So loud was his munching, and so intent was his enjoyment of the feast, that he failed to hear the soft padding of footsteps approaching from behind.

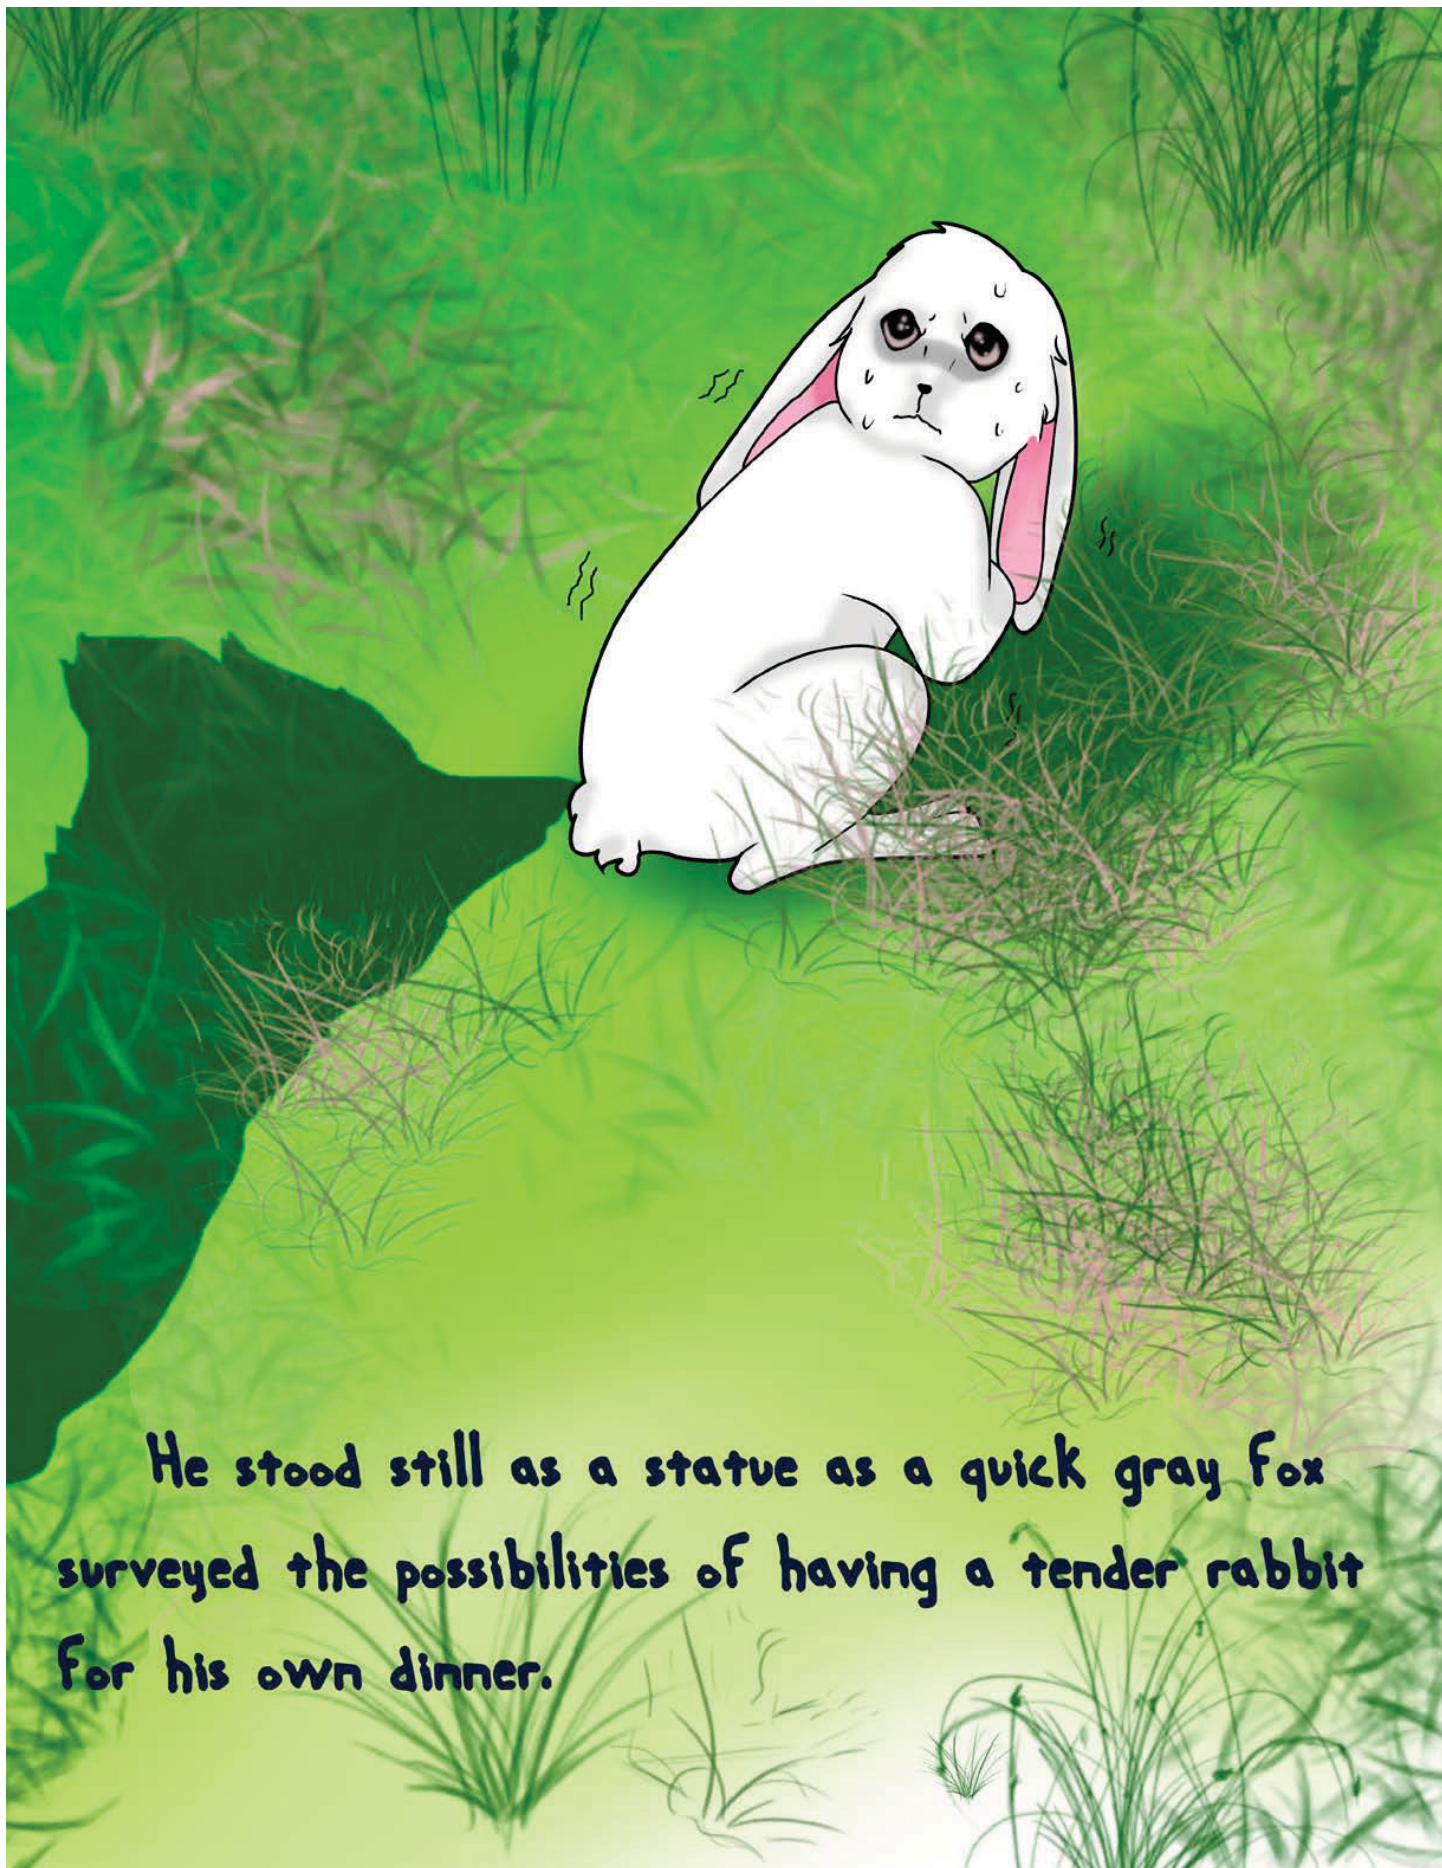

Then, there was an abrupt snapping of a twig. Suddenly, the Little Rabbit found himself face to face with a quick gray Fox.

For a moment, the Little Rabbit froze, his tiny heart pounding like a big fist in his chest.....

He stood still as a statue as a quick gray fox surveyed the possibilities of having a tender rabbit for his own dinner.

Gathering his senses about him,
the rabbit bounded away with the fox snapping at his cotton tail.
