

Sharing Jesus Without Saying a Word

Evangelism for the Introvert

Most people who know me would never guess what I'm getting ready to tell you...I'm a very profound introvert! Fifty years in ministry have forced me to learn how to be what I call a "functioning" introvert in social situations but left to my own devices; I would rarely mingle with strangers at a party or talk to anyone on the street. That has always made "witnessing" very difficult for me. Some ideas you're about to read came from those years of frustration with evangelism. Others I've discovered are fun and even more effective than talking, especially regarding strangers.

Many Christians believe sharing Jesus requires a smooth presentation with lots of memorized Scriptures. Others think you have to draw diagrams on napkins while you talk your way through the plan of salvation. These methods have led many people to the foot of the cross. However, most believers don't feel confident enough to witness this way.

I unintentionally developed a lifestyle of evangelism for those timid about engaging in gospel
