

The following day, General Zhu, along with a group of soldiers, dressed themselves as peddlers and took the moon cakes to the market place. The freshly baked aroma of the moon cakes brought people to their stand. When a villager bought moon cakes, he was also given one marked in red. He would be told, “This is a special moon cake—a bonus for your patronage.”